2020 International Summer Schools in Germany

Intercultural Competencies
July 19 – August 8

2020 International Summer School on »Intercultural Competencies« (INCO), July 19 – August 8

Focusing on psychological aspects of intercultural competencies, this course fosters understanding from both theoretical and practical perspectives. Its main goal is to broaden the knowledge of how intercultural competencies are conceptualized and how they can be developed systematically. First, participants will gain a general overview of different perspectives on culture and their implications, followed by an intercultural training. Finally, participants will design their own concept for a workshop on intercultural competencies.

Detailed Program

The school will comprise three consecutive units:

- Unit: In the first unit, students will have the opportunity to participate in keynotes and interactive seminars organized by leading German and international scholars in cross-cultural psychology, for instance, by Prof. Kate Hattrup (San Diego State University, USA) or Prof. Stefania Paolini (University of Newcastle, Australia). Topics such as „Culture and Competencies for Diversity“ or „challenges of achieving and maintaining intercultural harmony“ as well as many more will be discussed.
- Unit: In the second unit, the focus will be on the transfer of intercultural competencies into practice. This course is designed as an intercultural training workshop. The main goal of this course is to develop intercultural empathy using different interactive techniques and methods. Major topics of this training course will be cultural awareness, cultural values and attitudes, different communication styles and teamwork across cultures. This course, designed as an interactive workshop, seeks to convey a basic understanding of how culture influences the perception of time, space, and groups.
- Unit: In the third unit, participants will get the opportunity to design their own intercultural awareness training. Accordingly, this course aims to strengthen the didactic knowledge of the participants. Based on different materials and the theoretical as well as the practical knowledge acquired in the first weeks, they will draft an intercultural training course for different application areas. In small groups, the participants will prepare specific contents and methods required for different target groups. Examples are trainings for educational staff working with migrants, preparation courses for expatriates or intercultural workshops for multicultural teams. Each group will present its workshop concept at the end of the week.
