1. Description

This course promotes a broader understanding of comparative politics. It begins with the discussion of key concepts and the study of democratic and non-democratic systems as well as the processes of democratization and democratic consolidation, placing a particular emphasis in the notions of rule of law and fundamental rights recognition and protection. In a second part, we will study the structure of government, models of political decentralization, electoral systems and party systems. Finally, we will deal with some of the contemporary challenges to the state.

2. Course learning objectives

Students should be able to:

1. Be familiar with the main theoretical approaches to the study of political institutions in comparative perspective.
2. Acquire a basic knowledge of the political systems typology in contemporary world regarding different aspects, such as functional and territorial distribution of power and patterns of political competition.
3. Use the comparison between countries to achieve a deeper understanding of political phenomena.
4. Understand political change processes, particularly processes of democratization.
